Roughly Translated- It Means 'Hope' Robert M. Hinkelman

It is the run-up to the 2016 Presidential election. The bitterness in Washington is worse than ever. A sudden series of superstorms has created a pervasive fear but nothing is done. Unnoticed, a campaign develops based upon Theodore Roosevelt's governing principles which are as relevant today as a century ago coupled with a radical way to change the Executive Branch. The Campaign uses social media and elected representative analyses to create commitment especially with Millennials who are searching for the American Dream but being denied. The campaign chooses Emily Esperantes to be its spokesperson, a task far more dangerous than imagined. The Republican Party and Wealthy, Old, White Men refuse to change so the campaign becomes a new party, Ar4-21C (A Roosevelt for the 21st Century). The outcome of the election is influenced by a foreign power and the power of the people. It is stunning.
