Con Frank Kreffl

The first 750 British convicts landed on the barren shores of New South Wales in 1788. The last few landed in Fremantle, Western Australia, in 1868. In the intervening 80 years, over 160,000 convicted men, women, and children were shipped "down under." They were English, Irish, Scottish, American, Canadian, and others. Life in the colony was harsh: people who arrived late for work, bad-mouthed the boss, or sang while working in chains were mercilessly flogged. They rebelled. They founded a nation. They became the Australians. As Australia prospered, people from all over the world came in droves, and they are still coming.
