I would be lying if I said I hadn't ever wished death on my husband. I was guilty. And I used to not feel bad about having those feelings. My husband was evil and most days I hated him. I used to come up with outlandish schemes in my head to get rid of him without evidence coming back on me. I've watch Snapped many times. You had to play that shit careful or a jury wouldn't believe your word.

Ironically, now that my husband Marcos Beauchamp was laid up in the hospital, hanging on for dear life, I kind of felt guilty about my vindictive feelings. Did all of my hopeful wishes bring this about? I can't lie; a part of me was laughing inside. Not a giggle laugh either. It was one of those deep from the belly that worked its way up to the throat and came out forceful like you had heard the funniest shit ever. That's wrong; I know, but you don't understand. This man has taken me through hell and it serves his ass right.
~~ Nephia Beauchamp, mother of seven and wife of a woman beater

Hate to Love You takes you deeper into the life of Nephia as she recalls a traumatic past that leads up to the near fatal death of her abusive husband. She finds herself at a crossroad and unsure of what direction she will go. Take this journey along with her and see if Nephia's faith will allow her to stand by him or simply walk away and start anew.
