The tea gardens of North Bengal are in the grip of politics and violence. Workers are mere pawns. When a senior journalist walks into this melee, he takes with him the burden of his being a scion of a planter's family. His intimate knowledge of the region and its people helps him uncover the truth even as he battles with ghosts from his past. But no one likes the truth, and the retribution is swift.

The Writer: Academically trained in Economics and with a keen interest in governance, role of political risk in investment decision and development, Suparna Pathak has been in journalism since the day he left the portals of the university in 1984. Currently, he is the 'Business Editor' of Anandabazar Patrika, arguably the most influential vernacular daily in India. Two Leaves and a Bloody Bud is his first attempt at writing fiction.
