Love-Lust-Kink #6 Book 3. Great Lover Guide 1 Tony Kelbrat

A great lover loves all life in general.

Be honest and open.

Be a great lover by not taking it seriously.

A great lover is assertive but not domineering. He shares the direction of the session with his lover.

Certain people during my formative years used to say I had no shame in an effort to try to shame me (make me feel guilty) enough to conform to their standards. I felt that if I wasn't hurting anybody and exploring my life, there was no reason to feel shame.

I never really felt shame about masturbating. It's something that normal people do and I can't understand why anyone would deny pleasure in their life. Anyway, I was thinking about what makes a great lover the other day when it finally hit me.

Great lovers do not have shame about what they do because they feel it's a normal part of exploring your life and sexuality unlike much of the population which has some kind of complex or inhibitions about sex.

As long as I don't hurt anyone, I can't apologize for who I am sexually because it's me the way I was born. I have great slutty fantasies and great sexual experiences with people in the real world and I love it, I feel it's normal.

I don't flaunt it. I'm not arrogant about it but it's just me. I don't shy away from who I am sexually. I don't bury it or repress it. I live out my sexual potential to a good level of exertion.

Sex is intrinsically undignified. You're opening yourself to look less than stellar all in an effort to feel some love and pleasure. That's why I'm not serious about it, because it's inherently structured to look kind of foolish but the pay-off is so great, those great feelings of pleasure, fun and affection.

Accept what happens. If you make a stupid move, fart or look like you're getting zapped by electricity during your moment of bliss, so what. It's part of being human.

In order to be a great lover, you have to have a bit of the divine in you which means you have to live by the inner standard of your soul to try to stay inspired about life all the time.

Speak softly, look good naked and act like you really, really want to please your lover even if you don't.

No couple can have great sex all the time. It's a cyclical thing going up and down all the time. Sometimes you get tired and just want to rest to get away from it all. The stress of life takes its cut. Regardless of work and kids, you still have to make room for sex in your life.

We're not inherently monogamous so you will often be turned on by other people and may fantasize about sleeping with them.

Being a great lover means you love the person you're with and are a great lover of life. It's all about the esthetic lifestyle. You live for peace, beauty and experience, you have the sense to know that money is important but you're more concerned with life as it happens, beautiful experiences and the intensity of experience.

You find the passion inside of yourself and live it out. You have respect and commitment to your lover treating the two of you like two glasses of water poured into one. You bend to conform to her shape then live as one. You must respect the mundane, pragmatic things like the use of money equitably plus a sharing of household tasks.

A great lover is an original, an individual who has the guts to live his own life and share the beauty he has within with one great other person. Experimenting with different people is fine although I believe that after awhile, everybody wants a great perfect soulmate equal match.

A great lover is a passionate spirit. He has the ability to savor what to most people may seem like trivial moments and relish them for what they're worth, things like a cool breeze, a quick touch, a nice smell, good music, a sunset, her soft body, her nice clothes, her nice hair, the feel of the night, etc.

It's living for all these little beautiful things and cherishing them as much as you can throughout the day.
