Virtually all of the nearly 25 million citizens living in the isolated nation of North Korea are ethnic Koreans who share a common background, culture, and language. Their nation-state came into existence after the victorious World War II Allies divided the Korean Peninsula approximately in half at the 38th parallel, ending 1,000 years of territorial integrity. The 1945 division was intended to be temporary. However, it remains one of the most heavily militarized boundaries in the world.

The partitioning of the country North Koreans refer to as Chosun and South Koreans call Hanguk created two mutually hostile states, the Soviet-backed Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) in the North and the U.S.-backed Republic of Korea (ROK) in the South, in competition for recognition as the sole legitimate representative of the Korean people. The split had more than political implications. The North has a plentiful resource base including 200 different types of minerals. The agricultural South traditionally served as the peninsula's breadbasket. At the time of partition, the North was wealthier. Through the 1960s, the DPRK was more industrialized than the ROK and claimed a higher per capita income as well. Now it is routinely described as one of the poorest nations in the world, while the ROK may supplant Japan as Asia's second largest economy.
